

LINER RAMMED IN THE NIGHT BY BIG SCHOONER

The San Giovanni Has Narrow Escape While on Way to Port.

PASSENGERS IN PANIC.

Frantic as Gear of Sailing Vessel Sweeps Deck of Steamship.

By the narrow margin of a few inches the Italian steamship San Giovanni, of the Stevia-American Line, from Naples and Palermo, with 30 passengers on board, escaped being sunk by a schooner shortly after dark last evening while twelve miles east of Sandy Hook on the way to this port.

As it happened the schooner came so close that she poked her flying jibboom over the bulwarks of the big steamship, and, as it ploughed along the deck, carrying away the iron rail, struck a boat davit and snapped off about ten feet from the tip, and was still lying on the steamer's deck when she docked at Pier 5, North River, this morning.

Nearly all of the passengers were on deck at the time, and when the nose and sails of the big sailing ship appeared in such close proximity, and they heard the crunching of the iron work as the boom smashed through it, frightened cries that "the ship is sinking" went up from all sides, and a panic of the liveliest character followed.

As soon as the damage was found by the officers to be comparatively trifling an effort was made to calm the frenzied passengers. The steamship put back to where the schooner had anchored after the crash to learn the extent of the damage to her and if assistance was required. The latter was declined, and Capt. Ramona told that she was in no danger, as her hull was intact.

The officers of the steamship place the blame on those handling the schooner, which, they declare, showed no lights of any kind although it was long after dark.

Capt. Ramona, of the San Giovanni, who was standing watch at the time of the impact, gave the following account of the occurrence to an Evening World reporter who boarded the vessel at her pier this morning.

"We were proceeding at our usual speed during the early evening and saw a four-masted schooner of about 1,800 tons sailing in our direction and well off our starboard bow. She headed a little toward our course as darkness approached, and I was a little surprised that we could see no lights. Suddenly the look-out on our vessel shouted 'Red light right off our port beam!'

"Passengers in frenzy.

"I had scarcely time to give an order to shift the wheel, when the schooner's great boom came tearing through the port rail pretty well aft, and tore along until it struck a stanchion supporting the after house and the boat davit. The two iron supports held the boom until it snapped.

"We had on board about 20 passengers and there was pandemonium at once. The crash sent the steerage passengers into a frightened frenzy, and our officers and crew had the greatest difficulty in keeping some of them from leaping into the sea. When it became apparent that our hull was not damaged, something resembling calm was restored, and we put back and found the schooner was anchored in about 25 fathoms of water.

"Capt. Ramona called to her skipper and asked if she wanted us to stand by, but was told that she was all right, and inquired our name. In reply, as near as we could make out, he said she was the Frederick, but did not tell where she was bound, or whence she hailed."

The accident, the officer declared, was due to the schooner's tardiness in getting out her side lights after darkness set in.

TO TURN DOWN GILCHRIST.

Senator Alfred J. Gilchrist, of Brooklyn, one of the Republican Senators who voted for the passage of the race-track anti-betting bill, is to be turned down for re-nomination by the Republican organization of his district, the Twelfth. If he is set aside Gilchrist's friends declare he will run as an independent, and that the anti-race-track element among the others of the district will re-elect him.

Pink Pajama Girl, Back Without an English Lord, or Even an Accent, Says Success Is a Matter of Luck, and Admits She's Been Very Lucky ness of eye that made her the toast of London to make her fortune. The same even to the pink pajamas, which peeped from an embroidered pink kimono during our talk, for the hour of my call at the Hotel Imperial, where Miss Chase is stopping, was very early, and she had not even had time to remove the filmy structure of lace and pink ribbons which topped her curls, and which may have been a nightgown.

"Broadway Has Grown So Tall!"

But though Pauline Chase will not seem a bit changed to New York the city seems vastly altered to her. "Broadway has grown so tall that I hardly knew it," she confessed. "I am amazed at the number of tall buildings that have sprung up."

Miss Chase had hardly spoken a sentence when I interrupted her with a comment.

"I'm so glad you haven't brought back an English accent," I said.

"There!" she exclaimed, triumphantly. "I knew I had not, yet a young man from one of the papers insisted that I had."

Then Miss Chase shattered another tradition that has grown around returning stars. I had asked her to tell me something of her remarkable rise, and she began it in this way:

"Well, in the beginning I was only a chorus girl."

Now, the customary formula is: "No! Oh, no! I never was in the chorus. I don't see how that report could have started. I want you to contradict it for me, please."

How She Came to Be the Pajama Girl.

"I was in 'The Rounders' first, and then in 'The Liberty Bells' company. I was known as the Pink Pajama Girl there because when it was being rehearsed I asked the manager to let me wear pink pajamas instead of a night dress in the dormitory scene, and he consented. I always had worn them, and I told him I didn't think I would feel at home in a night dress."

"Then Mr. Frohman decided he wanted the Pink Pajama Girl in London. That was in 1903. I appeared in Edna May's company for a while. Then for two years I was the first twin in 'Peter Pan' in that part I did a pillow dance in pink pajamas. Then came the opportunity to play Peter Pan."

"I have played it nearly 500 times now, and I believe I would love to be Peter Pan till I am an old, old lady of eighty. I could never get tired of the

A little American beauty who, when she left New York in 1903, was known only as Polly Chase, the Pink Pajama Girl of "The Liberty Bells" company, came back on the steamship La Touraine last Sunday just to spend a six weeks' vacation in her own America and to see what Time, which had turned her into a star of the London and Paris stage, had done to the country she had left behind her.

Moreover, unlike most American girls who have made a hit in London, Miss Chase came back absolutely without an English accent or an English lord.

Slim as ever, with the same rare Dresden fairness of skin and blue-eyes of New York as the Pink Pajama Girl, she was positively the same to London to make her fortune. The same even to the pink pajamas, which peeped from an embroidered pink kimono during our talk, for the hour of my call at the Hotel Imperial, where Miss Chase is stopping, was very early, and she had not even had time to remove the filmy structure of lace and pink ribbons which topped her curls, and which may have been a nightgown.

Although he had been saved from drowning only a few minutes before, when he was seized with a cramp in the water, John J. Rorke, of No. 658 Carroll street, Brooklyn, last evening dove off the breakwater at Brighton Beach and saved a man and his bride from drowning. Neither the man nor his wife could swim, and had it not been for Rorke's prompt action they would undoubtedly have drowned. They sank twice before Rorke reached them.

Rorke was exhausted when Austin Titus, of No. 666 Carroll street, who had gone to the beach with him, went to aid him in the work of rescue. They were all attended by Dr. Thomas Lynch and sent home in a car.

Walker H. Mens, twenty-six years old, a wealthy ranch owner of Laredo, Tex., and his twenty-two-year-old bride were the rescued persons. Rorke was sitting on the beach after he had been pulled out of the water when he saw Mens and his bride swept from the breakwater by a huge wave. They both floundered about in the water calling for help.

Rorke ran along the logs of the breakwater and tried to reach them. Then Rorke dove off the logs and grabbed them and thus prevented them from drowning. Young Titus, who is a strong swimmer, had by this time reached the trio, and striking Mens a blow in the face which stunned him, swam with him ashore, while Rorke brought in the young woman.

Rorke is connected with the law department of the Public Service Commission in Manhattan, and when he reported for duty to-day he wore bandages over the cuts he received while rescuing the couple.

Mr. Mens said he would request that the young man's brave act be recognized by the Carnegie Life Saving Commission.

Wouldn't Advise Girls to Go on the Stage.

"Would you advise other young American girls on the stage to go to London on the chance of making a hit there?" I asked.

"No," replied Miss Chase. "I wouldn't advise a girl to go on the stage at all. Success is all so much a matter of luck, of opportunity. Beauty may take her a little way; talent, personality, good further; yet there are girls of great talent in the chorus who never get out of it simply because the opportunity doesn't come to them."

"I have been very lucky," Miss Chase concluded, modestly. "But I have worked very hard, too. This is really the first vacation I have had long enough to come back to America—as I have wanted to do ever since I went away. The English have been very nice to me, but, of course, I love my own people best. And I am, oh, so glad to be here!"

Zotti's Clients Say Money Was Not Forwarded to Europe.

Frank Zotti, the Italian banker, of No. 108 Greenwich street, who owned the immigrant ship Brooklyn, which, he says, was wrecked off the Azores, was arraigned before Magistrate Corrigan in the Tombs Court to-day on a charge of larceny.

Antonio Luzio, of No. 31 Desbrosses street, said he had given 1,000 kronen to Zotti's bank, to be forwarded to Vienna, and that the money had never reached its destination. Post Office Inspector Kinkaid said numerous complaints had come to the post office from foreigners, who said that money they had sent to Zotti's bank to be forwarded to Europe had never been received by the consignees.

The examination was continued until to-morrow. Zotti is under $24,000 bail.

CHICAGO, July 28.—After what threatened to be an all-night session, the Independence party in convention early to-day nominated Thomas L. Hisgen, of Massachusetts, for President, and John Temple Graves, of Georgia, for Vice-President.

Hisgen was nominated on the third ballot. Howard, of Alabama, and Lyons, of New York, divided the votes with the Massachusetts man on the first two ballots, and then New York switched from Lyons to Hisgen, and Graves was withdrawn to take the nomination for the second place on the ticket.

The convention concluded its work only after a most stormy session, a riot being started by John I. Shepard, a delegate from Kansas, who attempted a stampede for Bryan. Shepard was thrown from the platform, his badge torn from him, and a policeman led him out of the convention and to a hotel. Half a dozen other boisterous and in-laws of Bryan's were corralled by the police and taken to the lock-up. The convention was in an uproar for nearly an hour.

Shepard had attempted, in defiance of the platform, to present the name of Mr. Bryan as a candidate for the Presidency. After he had left the hall he was expelled from the National Committee of the Independence party and his name struck from the list of delegates.

Mr. Hisgen's name was presented by Rev. Roland D. Sawyer, of Massachusetts.

"The old parties," he declared, "have demonstrated the fact that they will not grant any real relief from existing conditions, economic, social or political. We see great trusts and corporations growing in power, stifling trade and controlling legislation until for the people there is nothing. The men they elect to office become the servants of the corporations. No relief can be obtained from them. We are confronted with the task of selecting a man who will properly represent the idea that this new party stands for. Massachusetts has such a man and deems it an honor to put in his name. He has proved his enmity for presidential wealth. He stands for everything that John D. Rockefeller is against; he stands against the methods of John D. Rockefeller. He is respected as an honest man who stands for honest ideas."

The mention of Mr. Hisgen's name brought the Massachusetts assembly to the foot of the platform, followed by that of California, Vermont, Maine and New Hampshire and a dozen states and banners. For nine minutes the Massachusetts delegates whipped it up for their candidate. The band helped out as did some of the women.

Mrs. Hisgen sat in the background. Mr. Hisgen sat with his fellow delegates and appeared to be very much pleased. Illinois and South Carolina sent their standards to join the others.

THIS is the caution applied to the public announcement of Castoria that has been manufactured under the supervision of Chas. H. Fletcher for over 30 years—the genuine Castoria. We respectfully call the attention of fathers and mothers when purchasing Castoria to see that the wrapper bears his signature in black. When the wrapper is removed the same signature appears on both sides of the bottle in red. Parents who have used Castoria for their little ones in the past years need no warning against counterfeiters and imitations, but our present duty is to call the attention of the younger generation to the great danger of introducing into their families spurious medicines.

It is to be regretted that there are people who are now engaged in the nefarious business of putting up and selling all sorts of substitutes, or what should more properly be termed counterfeits, for medicinal preparations not of the mother to scrutinize closely what she gives her child. Adults can do that for themselves, but the child has to rely on the mother's watchfulness. Genuine Castoria always bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

Attorney-General Announces He Will Fight Reversal of $29,000,000 Fine.

LENOX, Mass., July 28.—Attorney-General Bonaparte and other prosecuting officers of the Government, with the assistance of several leaders in the practice of law, including Senator Frank B. Kellogg, of Minnesota, took up the consideration to-day of the question whether the criminal suit against the Standard Oil Company for alleged rebating and other violations of the interstate commerce laws shall be further pressed in the courts. The assembly, besides Mr. Bonaparte, included Solicitor-General Henry M. Hoyt, of Washington; Edwin M. Stimson, of Chicago; United States District-Attorney for the North District of Illinois; his first assistant, James H. Wilkinson, of Chicago, and Senator Kellogg. One of the parlors of the hotel Astor was taken apart as a meeting place.

A great mass of legal literature in connection with the trial of the suit against the Standard Oil Company at Chicago, some fifteen months ago, was brought on from Washington and Chicago, together with the text of the decision of Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis in imposing the $29,000,000 fine upon the company, as well as the latest document in the case, the decision of the United States Court of Appeals setting aside Judge Landis's decision and his finding.

After three hours spent in discussing the main points at issue, the statement was made that the conference had unanimously decided to take steps immediately for the retrial of the criminal suits against the Standard Oil Company.

PREMATURE BLAST SCARES SHOPPERS

Man Who Set It in Old Fifth Avenue Hotel Probably Fatally Hurt.

A premature blast in the cellar of the old Fifth Avenue Hotel caused panic to-day in the vicinity of Madison Square, and probably fatally injured James Gilroy, a workman, of No. 359 Seventh avenue.

The blast was set to dislodge the concrete in the cellar, and Gilroy was moving away when the explosion shook the earth and sent rocks flying through the air. One of the rocks struck him in the back of the neck, fracturing his skull.

The explosion caused excitement among the women shoppers in Twenty-third street, many of whom dodged into the doorways of the shops. Gilroy was taken to the New York Hospital.

SICK INFANTS OFF FOR A STAY AT SEA BREEZE

Fifty "Evening World Babies" Among the Two Hundred Sent To-Day.

ON A TEN-DAY OUTING.

Mothers and Little Ones Sadly in Need of Ocean Air and Good Food.

There was many an anxious look taken at the lowering skies this morning by the mothers and children due for a ten-day stay at Sea Breeze. West County Island, as guests of The Evening World Sick Babies' Fund. In the batch of 200 sent to the home to-day by the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor there were fifty "Evening World babies," as they are called.

When, at 9 o'clock, the threatened rain had failed to materialize, as happy a crowd as could be imagined boarded East Twenty-third street trolley cars for the ride to the Greenpoint ferry from the United Charities building at No. 105 East Twenty-second street. Specially chartered cars were waiting on the other side and the gleeful party reached Sea Breeze well before noon.

Mothers and children began to gather at the association's rooms before 4 o'clock. There were some families as large as eight or ten, ranging in age from infants in arms to boys and girls of eleven. For the most part, however, the children were wee babies, whose pinched faces and wide staring eyes showed the need of the ocean air and good food of Sea Breeze.

The fifty "Evening World babies" had been selected with great care, and each one of them was either ill or poorly nourished. Before receiving the coveted ticket, which entitled the bearer to a stay at Sea Breeze, the children had to pass the watchful eye of Dr. Peter Irving. Several had to be sent home, but with assurances that with proper treatment they would be allowed to join another party in a few weeks.

Each Wednesday the association sends out about two hundred mothers and children and throughout the season fifty "Evening World babies" will be included. It is expected that about 500 in all will be sent by this newspaper.

Four times a week the association conducts a day excursion to Sea Breeze. Last year 36,000 mothers and children were entertained at the home, and not one lot was lost or injured.
